A WORLD BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

JAIN INTERNATIONAL RESIDENTIAL SCHOOL

A word before the gavel

Long before laws were written into books, they were spoken into existence.

Every constitution, every treaty, every ordinance that has shaped civilizations began as an idea -questioned, defended, challenged, and ultimately accepted through the power of words. History has never been altered by silence; it has always been rewritten through dialogue.

That is the spirit of Verbum Vincere: Ordinance.

At JIRSMUN 8.0, we are not merely simulating diplomacy - we are celebrating the process through which ideas evolve into policy and conviction transforms into action. Every committee room is a reminder that leadership is not defined by titles or volume, but by the ability to listen with intent, reason with clarity, and speak with purpose.

As Secretary-General, my aspiration is simple: to create a conference where curiosity is valued over certainty, collaboration triumphs over competition, and every delegate feels empowered to leave an intellectual footprint. Whether you arrive as a first-time participant or an experienced diplomat, I hope you leave with perspectives that challenge your own, conversations that stay with you, and a deeper appreciation for the responsibility that accompanies every word we choose.

After all, history seldom remembers who spoke first. It remembers the words that endured.

Verbum Vincere Ordinance

A war has been raging for ages, one waged by those who shall readily sacrifice or slaughter anything or anyone that comes their way. Some 'pundits' call this the war for society; some call it the war of Dharma, while some just term it the survival of the fittest. Nevertheless, the implications of this reckoning between the common man and the system have resulted in an inevitable backlash from the downtrodden side. The dogmas and conspiracies themselves have created a world so tangled and distorted that it's practically impossible to discern what's what.

Our generation is a blessed lot with an Achilles' heel. Even though we're advancing rapidly up the ladder of progress, going from discovering the first stone tools over 3 million years ago to our first space expedition in 1961, the journey has been nothing short of spectacular. But the share of each person on this planet in this journey is not exactly equitable. The world around us is evolving and developing, but it is also becoming a supercilious paradise instead of an inviting family.

Therefore, it's pretty evident to anyone who lives in this realm that war or not, we're in a crisis. Wars, environmental hazards, sinking economies, epidemics — we're surrounded by a farrago of issues, and all of them are converging. Hence, it's pivotal that those who've been granted the gift of advocacy take charge and bring forth the necessary change, but that change cannot come from the 'means of progress' that've created the need for it. It must carry the very elixir that sustains such noble pursuits — Elpis. And Elpis doesn't live in heaven like the other deities; it churns in the human heart, nestles in our soul, and in this world where benevolence is fast eroding, there remains one bastion where Elpis can take refuge — words.

In this time when our eyes deceive us, our brain fools us, and the heart goes mum, let us keep our humanity intact and shielded within the realm of words.

As it goes in our heart: "The world we dream of might not exist in this universe, but words and Elpis keep it sound until the time comes for it to come to life..."

May your words give birth to your world.

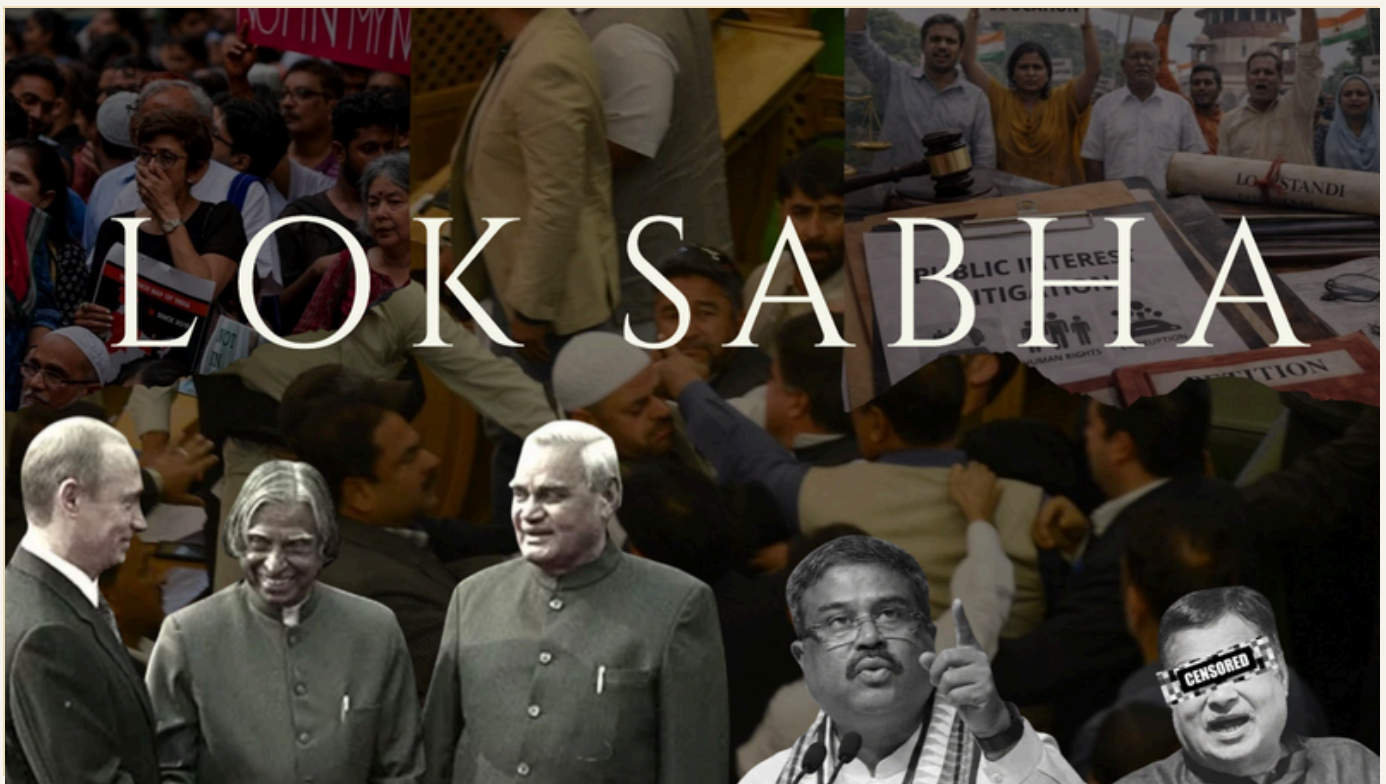

“A world behind closed doors.”

In every era, there is a moment of disillusionment, one where the masses, after being blinded by the drapes of indulgence and superficial liveliness, realise, despite all their foolishness, that their lives are, in fact, a vapid dream. But the onset of a revolutionary pandemonium isn't brought about by chance; it is brought forward by individuals who possess the zeal of a king, those who ponder upon ramifications like a scholar, ones who have the audacity to create lucid, surreal worlds and the perseverance of a pariah to keep those alive during volatile times. This is not a change, but rather an evolution, one where mankind fights against itself, for itself.

JIRSMUN26 is a stage that projects a life-size performance of this very fiasco, one that keeps humanity alive. It is not a simulation of the war that awaits you; it's an arena that prepares you for it. Now it is your turn to decide whether to pick up, join or drop the weapons. The only dilemma is: how do we decide between right and wrong when all's at stake? Amidst all your precious possessions kept on the altar of the future, what really is dispensable? And most importantly, in a room full of lamps whose wicks are soaked in the same oil, how do you outshine the others without extinguishing them? In the end, what happens behind these doors shall make a world of difference, and you get to decide whether it'll be utopian or dystopian.
